A. Read the text and then answer the questions.

Dressing up for the occasion

Before the 2008 Olympics, the Chinese government told Beijing residents exactly what to wear during the 16 days of the Games. It gave leaflets containing dress code instructions to around four million households. They advised people to wear no more than three colour groups in their clothing and prohibited people from visiting their neighbours in pyjamas and slippers. They also recommended dark-coloured socks. The government's Olympic slogan for citizens was 'I participate, I contribute, I enjoy'. It also employed nearly a million volunteers to give tips for good manners at schools, universities and government offices. The results of all this? People started to dress more elegantly and began to queue at bus stops.
